

GOLF.

Reputation of a trade mark or name is not won in a day, nor without expense. After it's won you're apt to pay well for it.

Take Derbys. Many of you are paying $5—$2 for reputation.

Ours at $3 are just as good, because no better are made.

All the fashionable shapes.

Another exception to the rule of paying for reputation is our clothes; our prices are the same as for the ordinary kind. We're ready for rain and winter.

IRISHMAN'S QUEER CONDUCT.

Irishmen Here Cannot Understand Why He Tempted His Fate.

The only thing that Irishmen in this city were sure about yesterday in reference to the arrests of Fyann, Kearney, and Bell, was that they did not hold but Mr. Tynnan's common sense to be of a particularly high order. All agreed that the identity of the prisoners has been established. Most of them contended that the whole plot was merely the product of somebody's imagination. But, even for the sake of selling England a gold brick, they could not understand how Tynnan and his colleagues, more particularly Kearney, could lend themselves to a scheme which more likely than not would result in disaster to both. Tynnan knew that he was wanted on British soil for the part which he said he took in the Phoenix Park murders; the Home Office had ample evidence upon which to convict him, and he had taken to the blowing up of the Caledonian Railway station and the gas works in Glasgow. Some of the more rabid Englishmen, however, were posed as Irish patriots at the instigation of the British Government, had sent word to Tynan that he was to be the subject of an attack and that he was wanted to perfect the details. Such information, it was said, would flatter Tynan's vanity and make him more susceptible to the lure of these rabid anti-British agitators spoke of the publication of Tynan's book, "The Irish Nation and the English Empire."

Farrall argued by many that Thomas D. Farrall, acting as the secret agent of the Tory Government in the United States, had been a man of honor and devoted one whole chapter to his part in the killing of Cavendish and Burke. Farrall was to be paid $25,000 for his services. A lamp to bring out the work. Umpf conducted with the Weston Publishing Company of Hahoyah, N. Y., and the latter had agreed to make an advance payment of $2,000 to the publishing company. This money, Farrall said, was to be used to publish the book.

When, however, Major Henry Arthur Herbert, secretary of Arthur J. Halford, then Chief Secretary for Ireland, learned of the plot, he ordered Tynan to Tynan with Farrall, and was a party to the drawing of the papers between Farrall and Tynan. Tynan, who was in the North, a cousin of the late nitrate king, as Farrall thought, Tynan and his friends thought that Farrall, an Irish patriot, was a traitor. Later, it was pointed out, Tynan was a traitor.

While the Irishmen were speculating about the plot and what it meant, a report reached the British Government that Tynan was a traitor. The British Government, in the office of O'Donnovan Rossa in 1885, and Rocky Mountain O'Brien, also implicated in the plot, having been sent for by Tynan. The news came in a letter from Short's wife to a well-known man in Chicago, was solicited as to her husband's safety, and wrote to say that he could not be called home.

THE DYNAMITE PLOT.

Bell Taken to London—The French Bitter the Whole Story.

Sept. 10.—Edward Bell's

aged dynamiter, who was arrested here on Saturday, was again arraigned in court this morning on a charge of conspiracy to blow up the Palace. He will start this evening in charge of anything he pleases before the Magistrate here, and would not even speak to the officers who were guarding him. After he was returned to his cell, he was visited by a policeman and made a statement of absolute reticence.

It has been learned that the name Bell, given by the alleged dynamiter arrested here on Saturday last, is an alias, the prisoner's real name being John Bell.

PARIS, Sept. 19. In response to inquiries made at the Prefecture of Police in regard to the arrest of a dynamiter, it was ascertained that he had been arrested here, a reporter was informed that not only was there no truth in the report that he had been arrested here, but that he had not even been arrested here, but that his arrest had not even been mentioned in the papers.

The French public press ridicule the whole theory of the existence of a dynamite conspiracy, and are inclined to believe that the Government intend to interfere with the proposed trial of the dynamiters.

Mr. Sarrault announces that two friends of P. J.

that place, having gone there at the request of the prisoner's mother. They endeavored to get permission to communicate with the prisoner, but were refused. The same day, however, were unable to do so. It is said that in any event no one will be allowed to see Tynan or his mother until the Government has first secured the consent of the Government.

It is learned upon credible authority that the French Cabinet gave a polite refusal to the English ambassador's request to grant the request for Tynan's extradition.

His mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Tynan, and his two sisters, Miss Cecilia Tynan, son and daughter of P. P. J. Tynan, with their grandfather, called to-day on board the steamer Albatross to see their son, but were told that he knew nothing whatever of his father's movements.
